Church Decorations.

The following communication of Mr. Anthony McLean, of this city, is published in this weck's issue of the Southern Churchman: ALEXANDRIA, March 18, 1879.

In my unavoidable absence from a recent vestry meeting of St. Paul's church, the Bishop's letter, addressed to the clergy and fax, lying as they de, contiguous, immediately vestries of the churches in this diocese upon the subject of church decorations (floral, &c.), was, after some little discussion, adopted. Now I wish, as one of the wardens of this church, to protest against the action of the vestry, unless the Bishop intends to carry out, literally, his views, as expressed therein, namely, "neither to take from or add one iota to the rubries."

The first page of our Book of Common Prayer calls for daily morning prayer, in the church and on the part of the congregation. Not many pages further on is the order for daily evening prayer; and the services set apart for saints' days, to be as strictly observed as those for Sunday.

The credence table is a thing, comparatively speaking, unknown in Virginia, the use of which is especially provided for in the communion service, by inference at least.

The use of flowers in St. Paul's church does not date back, perhaps, as far as that of the surplice, but the custom has obtained at and since the election and occupancy of the first Episcopal Church in the State of Virginia and in this country. (See Bishop Meade's "Old Churches and Old Familes of Virginia," vol. 1, pp. 66, 69 and 70) in this State: breadth twenty-four and shall have chancel in it of cedar, a communion table of black walnut and all the news of cedar, with fair broad and all the pews of cedar, with fair broad windows to shut and open (as the weather shall occasion) of the same wood-a pulpit of the same, with a font hewn below, like a canoe two bells at the west end. It is so east as to be very light within, and the Lord Governor and Captain General doth cause it to be kept passing sweet and trimmed up with divers stowers Every Sunday we have sermons twice a day and every Thursday a sermon, having true preachers, which take their weekly turns; and every morning, at the ringing of the bell at ten o'clock, each man addresseth himself to prayers, and so, at four o'elock".....

The following is a sketch of the first church

Now, as the ladies and children of our congregation have all looked forward to this beautiful memorial on Easter Sunday, I am a little jealous, I must confess, as to what these ladies consider their rights, and to even conciliate them would, perhaps, not be unwise, for they are our main dependence, as to ingenuity and perseverance, when we are in need of means to carry out many a little necessary or even desirable church improvement. It down, then should we at once come up fully to what is required in our rubries, as before mentioned. Other omissions might be named. (See Rubric on Baptismal Service.) If we were so unfortunate as to lose our present Bishop, another might be elected, a Ritualist perhaps, of very excessive ideas and notions, who would have instanced as to lose our present by the substitution of the purchase money is paid in full.
